

THE INFANTA'S WELCOME.

CANNON GREET THE ARRIVAL OF THE SPANISH PRINCESS

INFANTA YSABEL—SHE IS RECEIVED ON THE DOLPHIN AND THEN GOES TO WASHINGTON ON A SPECIAL TRAIN.

The representative of the royal court of Spain, the Infanta Eulalie, departed yesterday at 3 p. m. for Washington to be received on the gunboat Dolphin. The steamer on which she came from the station of the Atlantic coast, through the narrows of the Chesapeake, greeted her with the salutes of the New World by ships of war, while the forts greeted the Spanish princess with thunderous salutes. The Infanta Eulalie and her suite arrived here Thursday evening in the Spanish steamer Reina Maria Cristina. The steamer reached New-York waters earlier than she was expected. She dropped anchor and awaited the dawn of day. When the first rays of light be-aloud the rigging of the vessels, which looked like masses of crimson and gold, rising and falling on the bosom of the waters. There was a strong breeze, and every bit of hunting was in dress parade.

[illegible]

COMING INTO THE HARBOR.

It was after 9 o'clock when the Reina Maria Cristina and the Infanta Isabel weighed anchor and passed inside the Hook. The Dolphin was waiting for them off the Government pier. From Sandy Hook there came the roar of great guns as the Spanish vessels passed inside the bar. The Dolphin, decked like a palace, led the way through slip channels to the narrows. Between the living green, past the smoke forts, the thrashing wheat glided through the narrow gateway of the great forest harbor of New-York. Behind the Dolphin came the Reina Maria Cristina and last came the white cruiser Infanta Isabel, whose decorated masts and spars were like a forest of crimson and gold of autumn. From the warship, sail and rope there floated the colors of the main and the royal pennant was flung astern as the procession halted a short distance from the wharf at Quarantine. The Cristina fell back and the Health Officer of the Port, Dr. Jenkinson, then boarded the Spanish steamer. He was

While the three vessels lay at anchor there were a host of tugs and yachts filled with people anxious to see and hear. On one tug were us a large steamboat on which were several

THE INFANTA LEAVES HER VESSEL.

[illegible][illegible]

The Infanta Isabel was slowly hauled down. A timbal man fired by the Infanta Isabel told that the Infanta Isabel had let the man-o-war. A moment later the Infanta Isabel was hoisted from the Dolphin and a salute was fired. The Infanta Isabel had invited the Infanta Isabel to accept his invitation then as her introduction to New York City. The Infanta Isabel were to enter the harbor on a Spanish man-o-war. She

At the top of the gangway she looked upon the cities on each side of the river and at the ships in the harbor. She smiled. She extended her hand to another officer and asked him a number of questions about the Dolphin. The royal party took luncheon on board the dispatch boat.

At 2:45 p. m. the party was transferred to the